

“The Mission of Renewal: 5 Practices” // Jeremiah 29:4–7 // *Live Sent 2025*¹ // Su 8

- There’s a now infamous story from 20 years ago where I met with the mayor of Durham / HOPUD / One of first applications for that was foster care, because what better way to show off the gospel than to meet kids at one of the most tender times of their live and show off the love of the gospel
 - This is not the mayor of Durham, but...
 - “Tell us what’s going on in this and how we can help”:
- (MAYOR/REP speaks)
- J.D.: Imagine the day that in Wake and Durham and Orange and Alamance counties there are no foster kids uncared for--that we have a list of foster families equipped and ready to take in kids who have needs. We can do that, Summit. We should do that. By God’s grace, let’s make it so.
- To MAYOR/REP: How can we pray?

Let’s thank XXXX... If you have your Bibles, open them, if you will, to Jer 29. I want to put this discussion on foster care in the larger picture of what we’re called to do.

We just finished up our study on Revelation, and in a couple of weeks we’re going to start our study of the book of 2 Corinthians, which is going to be awesome, but in these weeks in between we wanted to do a little mini-series on RENEWAL.

In the final scene in Revelation, Jesus had said: “Behold, I am making all things new.” (Rev 21:5). Pastor Bryan pointed out last week that this is not a future tense verb--as in, “one day, I’ll make all things new,” but right now, in the present, I am making all things new.

Which is what this mini-series is about. RENEWAL. Last weekend Pastor Bryan gave an incredible message on Psalm 32 showing how Jesus brings personal renewal to us; this weekend we’re going to see how he brings renewal through us, to our city.

A lot of Christians wonder what effective gospel ministry looks like in an age like ours. What are you actually supposed to be doing in your lives? Is it just what we do in here that counts? (As in, you guys go to work all week so you can give your money so we can do this?) Or does serving God in the city primarily mean forcing awkward evangelism encounters into conversations wherever you can?

True story: A few years ago an American Airlines pilot was taxiing his 767 down the runway at LAX, flight 34, getting ready to take off for JFK, and he picked up the intercom to make his usual pre-flight announcements when he had a big idea (and perhaps, he thought, maybe even a GOD-idea!).

You see, he'd just gotten back from a mission trip to Costa Rica, and y'all, he was FIRE UP about Jesus. So, at the end of his pre-flight announcements, he paused, offered up a quick prayer and then said, "One more thing, folks: Could I get any born again Christians on our flight to raise their hands?" People looked around confused and a few people gingerly raised their hands. Then he said, "OK, for the rest of you--I'd encourage you to use this time to talk to these people with their hands raised, because they can tell you how to know for sure you'll go to heaven when you die."

People started freaking out, of course! I mean, the pilot of your airplane telling you to "get ready to meet Jesus"?

Thankfully flight 34 made it safely to JFK, and all the passengers disembarked with a bizarre story to tell their friends and the zealous pilot disembarked with an immediate summons to see his supervisors.²

Now, if you're anything like me, you admire this guy's zeal, but you think, "There's just no way I could pull a stunt like that and keep my job." And you're probably right.

But is that what you're supposed to be doing?

As you've probably heard, I released a book on Tuesday called Everyday Revolutionary: How to Transcend the Culture War and Transform the World, and this is what it is about. This morning I wanted to take a key passage from that book, Jeremiah 29:4-7, that I build the book around, and unpack it for you--because it lays out for us the mission of renewal we should have to our city. (As always, I want you to know... In fact, I wrote this because it crystallizes the heart of our mission philosophy)

OK, here it is: Jer 29:4 "Thus says the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, to all the exiles whom I have sent into exile from Jerusalem to Babylon: Build houses and live in them; plant gardens and eat their produce... Take wives for your sons, and give your daughters in marriage, that they may bear sons and daughters; multiply there, and do not decrease. Seek the welfare of the city where I have sent you into exile, and pray to the Lord on its behalf, for in its welfare you will find your welfare."

Here's the context for this passage: Jeremiah was written about the same time as the book of Daniel in the Bible. Israel had been carried off into captivity into Babylon because of their sin, and a lot of Israelites were wondering how to respond to the situation. Here they have been uprooted from their land and taken to a strange city. Apparently there were a number of would-be prophets who were urging the Israelites to resist any form of social integration in Babylon because, they said, any day now God was gonna raise up a new Moses to drop some serious plague action on Babylon like he had on

Egypt and lead his people back to the promised land.³ “Don’t listen to them,” Jeremiah said, “because these are false prophets.”

“No, for right now,” God says, “DON’T seek Babylon’s overthrow, and don’t sequester yourself in a little isolated holy huddle, holding hands, singing kum-ba-ya and waiting for the rapture. No, put down roots; get involved in the city; seek its prosperity; pray for its prosperity; make your home in it; make its problems your problems; devote yourself to making it a better place to live. It’s NOT your real home, of course--your real home is my Kingdom; but for right now, while you’re living as exiles here, testify to my Kingdom by bringing my blessing and renewal into the kingdom of Babylon.”

These were not special, isolated instructions given to one specific generation of Israelites at one unique period of history, either.

- No, in the NT, the apostles Paul and Peter build on Jeremiah’s instructions. Peter even opens his epistle to the church by saying, 1 Peter 1:1, that he’s writing to “exiles” living in Babylons all over the world, connecting what he’s saying to what Jeremiah said.⁴
- Now, of course, when Peter wrote those words, the actual city of Babylon had been destroyed for over 400 years; like other New Testament writers, the Apostle Peter uses Babylon as a metaphor for the age Christians live in now.
- If Peter were speaking to us today, he’d refer to Raleigh, and Durham, and Chapel Hill, as Babylon. You say, “Especially Chapel Hill.” Yeah, maybe.

⁴ 1 Peter 1:1–5; 2:11; 5:13.

I am going to distill Peter and Paul’s instructions down into five action steps;⁵ five ways we can “seek the welfare of the city into which he has sent us into exile.” I intend for these to be a comprehensive job description for every Christian whether you go to work every day teaching 3rd graders, directing the operations of a multinational business conglomerate--or, piloting a 767 from Los Angeles to JFK. To seek the welfare of the city, your work should be...

1. Creation-Fulfilling

Most of us are familiar with “the Great Commission,” which is to go to all the nations of the world and make disciples. But did you know that the Great Commission is not the first commission given to the people of God. No, the first commission to develop the world and make it a better place to live in. It’s what we call “the creation commission.” You see, God put Adam and Eve into his world as his “co-creators.” That’s part of what it means to be made in his image; he put us as his co-creators into an unfinished world. In fact, when God created the world, do you remember the word he used over and over to describe it? Good. “And God saw all that he had made, and it was ‘good.’” Scholars point out: Good means “good,” but good, you see, is not perfect. “Perfect” in Hebrew means complete; cannot be improved upon. “Good” means that the raw materials are there, and they are good, but there’s still improvements that can be made.

⁵ When Peter writes his epistle, he explicitly addresses it to “exiles” and refers to the Roman Empire as “Babylon,” conjuring up the imagery of Jeremiah. These 5 things are what I built Everyday Revolutionary around.

I used to explain the difference between those 2 things by saying this: I said that when you all see Veronica at church, she's perfect. Her outfit, her makeup, her hair--it's all 10 out of 10. Perfect; cannot be improved on. When I wake up next to her in the morning, she's... good. The raw materials of beauty are all there, but... there's a little work between the good and the perfect you see. That's what I used to say when I was a younger pastor, but I don't say that anymore because I have matured, but you still get the point.

God put us into a world that was good--a world where the raw materials of flourishing are there, but he leaves it up to us to perfect those raw materials: to turn seeds into gardens; to shape sand and rock into buildings; to turn musical sounds into symphonies; to codify principles of justice into legal systems; to blend colors together into art. We are co-creating with God; extending the beauties of the Garden of Eden to the ends of the earth. That is the "creation commission," and it's an important part of our witness, you see; because, as we do that, we're giving people a foretaste of God's kingdom, a taste of the world as God intended it to be.

Our work was to be, in and of itself, an act of worship to God. In fact, the Hebrew word for "work," in Genesis 2, "abad," shares the same root word with "worship" (avodah). The work (abad) God gave Adam to do in the Garden was Adam's first act of worship (avodah). As Tim Keller says, "God's first command to Adam wasn't to grab a harp and compose, but to grab a knife and shape."

Or, consider this--this will blow your mind: the first time the phrase "filled with the Spirit" is used in the Bible, is in Exodus 31: "The LORD said to Moses, "See, I have called by name Bezalel... and I have filled him with the Spirit of God (to)... " To... WHAT? To preach? To write worship songs? To pray in tongues? No. "...I have filled him with the Spirit of God with ability and intelligence, with knowledge and all craftsmanship, to devise artistic designs, to work in gold, silver, and bronze, in cutting stones for setting, and in carving wood, to work in every craft."⁶

Get your mind around that: The first time the phrase "filled with the Spirit" is used in the Bible, it's about a man's artistic ability, not his preaching or praying ability. Bezalel was filled with the Spirit to be an interior designer.

But why, you ask, would the Spirit of God be involved in that? It's because renewing and beautifying creation is part of how God makes himself known. A well-done job is a foretaste of the world as God intended it to be. It's how we serve God, and an important part of our witness. Does that make sense?

I remember one of my Sunday school teachers telling me a story about the nineteenth-century evangelist D. L. Moody. The story went that D.L. Moody walked into this gigantic meeting hall where he was to hold an evangelistic rally later that evening. The only other person in there was a janitor cleaning the place. Moody struck up a conversation with the janitor, and the janitor told him he had become a Christian at one of Moody's previous rallies. Moody pointed at the broom the man had and asked the man, “Is this your full-time job?” The man responded, “No, sir, Mr. Moody. I’m a full-time servant of Jesus Christ. I just do this to pay the bills.” And the story was supposed to inspire me toward evangelism. And hear me, I do believe telling people about Jesus is the most important thing we can do.

But that story also distorted my view of secular work, making me think of secular jobs as something we do ONLY to pay the bills. A kind of necessary evil--just a means to an end for funding real kingdom work--which is preaching and teaching and leading worship.

But friend, hear me: Being a full-time witness of Jesus Christ is not something we do after we pay the bills; it’s what we do as we pay the bills. Cleaning up a room for others to meet in, whether that’s so they can hear an evangelistic sermon, participate in a job fair, or watch a basketball game is a way of serving God and making him known. Again, a well-done job gives people a foretaste of the world as God intended it to be. That’s the first way we live out Jeremiah 29:7 command, and it brings me to the second way. To seek the welfare of the city, our work should be...

2. Excellence-Pursuing

How we do our work gives people a picture and a foretaste of Jesus.

Let me use Daniel himself as our example here. Daniel 6:3 says that “Daniel had an “excellent” spirit in him... (and, (vs 4) they) (meaning, Daniel’s enemies) could find no corruption in him, because he was trustworthy and *neither corrupt nor negligent.” Neither corrupt NOR negligent. Not only was Daniel honest, he never cut corners or did shoddy work. He did his stuff right on time, the first time. In fact, Daniel 1:20 says that “...in every matter of wisdom and understanding about which the king inquired of them, he found them ten times BETTER than all the magicians and enchanterers that were in all his kingdom.” In every subject--math, science, literature, history, all of it--Daniel and his friends were 10x better than everyone around them. It wasn’t just in their theology or in how they prayed. It was also how they devoted themselves to excellence in math and science. And that was the foundation of their witness in Babylon.

Paul develops this idea in the New Testament by saying: “And whatever you do (whatever you do! Whatever you do!), in word or deed, do everything in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God the Father through him.” Col 3:17⁷ That’s the language of offering! “Do it in the name of the Lord Jesus” means do it in a way you’re comfortable attaching the name of Jesus to? So, that’s the question:

- Is the quality of your work something you’d want Jesus’s name attached to?
- Would you be willing to put your work in the offering plate every weekend?

Because, you see, as with Daniel, people judge our God by the quality of work we do. A businessman in our community told me recently that he doesn’t like partnering with other Christian businesses because the ones he’s worked with didn’t honor deadlines or meet agreed-upon budgets and expected him to excuse their sloppy work because of “grace.” To give you the “Christian” discount. He told me, “I’ve learned when they put a Bible verse in their logo or a Christian fish under their name, you better watch out.” Now, that’s probably an unfair generalization, but the point is few things, practically speaking, damage the reputation of Christ in our community like a poor work ethic.

Some of you know that I’m on the board of directors for Chick-Fil-A, and the Cathy family, who own Chick-Fil-A, are very committed Christians. Part of their corporate statement is to glorify God in all that they do. Dan Cathy, the chairman of the board, often says to the owners: Jesus commands us to *“Let our light so shine before men, that they may taste our waffle fries and glorify your Father in heaven.”*⁸ Well, Amen and Amen. #3 connects to this...

3. Holiness-Reflecting

Our work should not only be creation-fulfilling and excellence-pursuing, it should be holiness reflecting. Peter’s overarching command to exiles in his epistles: “But as he who called you is holy, you also be holy in all your conduct, since it is written, ‘You shall be holy, for I am holy.’” (1 Peter 1:15–16)

Notice that word, “ALL.” It always baffles me how SOME church goers can maintain faithful church attendance, tithe regularly, raise their hands in worship--but all while cheating on their taxes, or skimming off the top, or doing shoddy work. Friend, our God is not just the God of church on Sunday; he’s God of the whole creation every second of every week. What you do outside of this place is a demonstration of how you think about him.

Listen: I read this this week: a recent study showed the American employee does an average of 2 hours and 53 minutes of work per day; the remainder is spent socializing, browsing personal things online, and engaging in other distractions.⁹ And people do that because they think they can get away with it with their earthly boss. But Paul says, Colossians 3, we ultimately don’t do our work for an earthly boss, we do it for a heavenly one! And even when they can’t see what we do, he can, and what we do we ultimately do for him.

Or how about this: a recent study asked 74,000 high school students whether or not they ever cheated on their school work. 95% of them answered “yes.”¹⁰ And btw, that one struck me as really high--so I checked around. And it may be high, but studies consistently show at least 70% of high school students cheat in some way.¹¹

Proverbs 11:1 says, “A false balance is an abomination to the LORD, but a just weight is his delight.” “Abomination” is a varsity level word in the Bible, normally associated with things like sexual perversion, exploitation, and murder. The writer of Proverbs, however, puts shorting a customer in the same category. It is an abomination to God to not give our employer his money’s-worth, our employees what they’re due, or when we lie to our professors about what we’ve done.

Again, Daniel 6:4: *“Daniel had an “excellent” spirit in him... (and they) (Daniel’s enemies) could find no corruption in him, because he was trustworthy and neither corrupt nor negligent.” And this was a huge part of his testimony in Babylon. What does your work (your conduct, your business, how you conduct your day to day affairs) make people think about your Jesus?

When I was growing up, my church had a wall of gospel tracts we could choose from to give to people around town. It looked like this (PIC) and we called it the “tract rack.” Anybody have one of those in their home church growing up? I always checked each weekend to see if we’d gotten any new additions, and one Sunday my eye was drawn to what looked like a $100 bill poking out of one of the slots. I thought, “Is Jesus giving me a reward for checking out these tracts?” But when I pulled it out (PIC), I was disappointed to find that it was a fake $100 bill, and on the other side of the bill it said something like: “Here’s the real tip: Find Jesus.” Here it is: “Some things are better than money.” You were supposed to leave this tract with your waiter at the restaurant, who would then REJOICE when he opened it to find that you had given him something even better than tip money--the path to eternal life!

Let me say: I 100% agree that finding Jesus is worth more than all the tip money in the world, but unless this tract is accompanied by an actual, really generous tip, it is unlikely to cause that waiter to start thinking about the goodness of God. And all you waiters and waitresses out there said, “Amen.” Look, I get it: Tipping has become super awkward these days. The waiter brings over that little device, and then he says, “Okay, you’ll just need to answer a couple of questions” and then he stands off to the side and looks awkwardly off in the distance, and I’m like “What questions? Why am I doing a survey?” Oh... the question of tip. Meanwhile the waiter is still hovering right there, kind of not-watching-you-but-watching-you and you can just tell, judging you. So, I get it, tipping is awkward, but here’s the thing: You just don’t get many opportunities in life to be generous with a stranger. So, be fair, but if you’re going to leave a gospel tract or a Summit Church inviter card for your waiter, and I think you should, accompany it with at least a 25 percent tip. Now, if you don’t leave an inviter card, you could go down to 15 to 20%, but if you do leave an inviter card, be generous. You’re much more likely to give them a feel of who Jesus REALLY is that way. A holy God of love and grace and extravagant generosity.

Which leads me to...

4. Redemption-Displaying

Our jobs give us a chance to show that God is more than just and fair; they give us a chance to demonstrate that he is generous, gracious, and redeeming. Few things in life give us a chance to put Jesus on display more than unexpected generosity.

I once heard about a young college graduate who landed a job in one of New York’s most prestigious advertising agencies on Madison Avenue. Shortly after she started, she made a mistake that cost the company tens of thousands of dollars and she expected to be fired by the end of the day. In that kind of environment, you don’t get a second chance. Her boss, however, went to the board of directors and said, “I should have done a better job preparing her; be patient with her, give her another shot; let the rap for this one fall on me.” Saved her job. Well, that kind of thing just does not happen on Madison Ave, and when this young woman heard about what her supervisor had done, she came to him, in tears, asking him why he would do something like that for her--she knew this kind of thing just did not happen up here on Madison Ave, especially for someone as insignificant as her. “Well,” he said, “because you asked--my life was forever altered because of someone who took the blame for me. Jesus took the punishment for my sin and gave me new life, and so now I like to do something like that for others when I can.”¹²

Now, I want to be clear here: I’m not trying to overturn the whole free-market system when I say that. A healthy economy runs on reward: you do the work, you get the pay. You do the work well; you get paid well. You fail at the job, you lose the job. That’s how God intended the system to work. It’s like Joby Martin says, “You’re saved by grace; you’re not employed by grace.”¹³

I’m just saying that even within that system, Christians have an instinct for grace that just pops up from time to time in moments of radical, unexpected grace, and it’s one of the ways we’re able to put him on display in Babylon.

Pursuing your job in a redemption-displaying way also means using your job to love people when they don’t always deserve it. When I was a teenager, my dad, who is a member here at Summit Church and whom many of you know, was the production manager at a textile factory. The factory had about 1000 workers, and from time to time dad had to make some decisions, like any supervisor does, that some of the employees didn’t like, and there was this one lady in particular who was very vocal in her dislike of my dad because he’d had to make some decisions she didn’t agree with. And whenever my dad would come around she’d be rude to him, she’d say snarky and derogatory things about him, and generally just complained about him and badmouthed him to others. Really, she kind of hovered right below that line of probably needing to be fired, but dad tried to be patient with her. Well, tragically, one day her son got killed in a car wreck and my dad went to his funeral. He walked up to her to hug her and tell her he cared and she said, “Why are you here?” And dad said, “Because I care, and I’m brokenhearted for you. And even more importantly, God cares.” And he prayed with her. A few weeks passed by and she came into his office and said, “I need to know why, after all that I’ve said about you to others, why you’d come.” He said, “I told you, it’s because I care and I’m brokenhearted for you more importantly God cares for you.” That started a relationship that led, a couple of months later, to this woman accepting Christ. That was the part of the story I knew, but I found out this week that this woman keeps in touch with my dad. He heard from her just a few weeks ago. Forty years later, she still reaches out to my dad sharing prayer requests; she even follows what we do here at the church and prays for us now. Friend, that’s why God puts you into the marketplace. To put the love of the gospel on display.

Here’s one more application. Pursuing your job in a redemption-displaying way means leveraging your business, where you can, to bless the broken parts of the city. I know of a business owner here in the Triangle, for example, who reserves at least four spots in his business specifically for youths aging out of the system, since one of the largest gaps in foster care is when they age out of the system.

¹³ I’ve heard Joby use this in multiple places, most recently in an interview with Josh Howerton, “Two Megachurch Pastors DEBUNK Megachurch Myths,” Resurge, March 1, 2025,

They become legal adults and are often left on their own with very little support. This business owner doesn't do that because it's the best possible thing for his bottom line--it's because he wants to leverage his business to bless the city. He wants his business to be redemption-displaying.

And that leads me to our fifth and final way we seek the prosperity of Babylon...

5. Mission-Advancing

This is familiar territory, Summit, but let me not assume anything and let me again make it clear. Matthew 28:19–20, the Great Commission, says, “Go therefore and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, [20] teaching them to observe all that I have commanded you.”

The only verb Jesus uses in those verses is mathēteúsate, “make disciples.” Everything else that looks to use like a verb in those verses is a participle. You say, “Well, that’s an interesting grammatical observation, but ‘so what’?” In Greek, participles grow out of, and gather their force from, the verb. So, IOW, everything else the church does is done under the banner of “making disciples,” that’s the verb around which all our other activities are organized.

And that applies to you regardless of your line of work.

Here’s a myth we really try to debunk at The Summit Church. It’s a widely believed one: it’s the idea “calling into ministry” is a sacred privilege reserved only for a select few super Christians, bestowed upon them by some kind of mystical manifestation--as in, God appears to you in some burning bush or he writes a message to you in the clouds. That’s why I’ve called it “the Cheerios method” of discerning the call of God, meaning that you expect that if God wants to call you into his service, he’ll do something magical like spell out in your Cheerios: “Be a missionary.” “Teach Sunday School.” And unless he does that, all he wants is for you to be a good person, go to church, and pay your tithes.

But that’s not usually how God calls you. To be clear, if God does spell out something to you in your Cheerios, you should probably pay attention. But I’ve stared at my Cheerios for years and all they ever spelled out was “Ooooooooooooo.” (That joke never gets old.)

But see, the truth is that every Christian is called to ministry. The call to be his witness and make disciples was, in fact, included in the initial call to follow Jesus. In Matthew 4:19 Jesus said to his first followers, “Follow me and I will make you fishers of men.” Which means that when you accepted the call to follow Jesus, you accepted the call to ministry. We say the question now is no longer if you are called, it’s only where and how.

And for many of you, the workplace is WHERE God has called you. You getting that? It’s where you do the four things I’ve just talked about. In the workplace you’ll encounter people who would never step foot in a church, and God expects you to make his name known there and to make disciples there.

Billy Graham famously said that the next Great Awakening would happen in the workplace, not in the stadiums--and that is exactly where many of you go each day at 8am!

Furthermore, like I've told you, skill in secular work can give you access to some of the least evangelized places in the world. (PIC) This is what they call the 10/40 window which is where the least reached people on the planet live. I've told you this stat before, but mission agencies report a total of 40,000 professional Christian missionaries working to bring the gospel into the 10/40 window. But, the U.S. State Department says that the number of American citizens working in so-called "secular employment" in the 10/40 window is... 2 M... 240K. You see, for many of you, the 10/40 window is not a window at all, it's a wide-open door! Maybe God has given you that skill so you can take the gospel into those places!

Which always leads to one of my favorite Summit stories: One of our elders here, Mike, is head of neurology at one of our nation's most prestigious medical universities, the top ranked neurosurgeon in the world. Every year his university sends him to medical conferences around the world as their representative. Mike often finds himself in some of the least-evangelized places on the planet, the special guest of Communists, Buddhists, and Muslims. He opens every talk by telling my testimony and then explaining how his experience with the gospel impacts his view of medicine. I asked him, "How is your university ok with that? I mean... they're kinda on the other team with this. They are, after all, not at all interested in world evangelization. In fact, they'd be downright opposed to it." He said, with a twinkle in his eyes--and he's not arrogant at all, he's quite humble--"Well, J.D., I'm one of the top ranked neurosurgeons in America. I can say whatever I want." Mike's life and ministry reminds me of Prov 22:29, where King Solomon says, "Do you see a man skillful in his work? I tell you, he will stand before kings!" Mike does his work excellently, and he stands before kings because of it. And while he's got their attention, he points them to King Jesus.

For some of you, your skill in our career is going to enable you to stand before kings, like Daniel did, and when you're there, God intends for you to tell them about Jesus. Listen: it's WHY God made you good at what you do--why he gave you that success; why he gave you that platform, why he gave you that skill or ability--to make Jesus known from that platform. To leverage that platform for his glory. And if you're not making Jesus known from that platform, you're wasting it, and one day you'll have to answer to Jesus for why you didn't use that platform for the purpose he gave it to you for.

Creation-fulfilling; excellence-pursuing; holiness-reflecting; redemption-displaying; mission-advancing.

These are the 5 ways you are supposed to bring blessing to your city. Living out these 5 ways may not seem like aggressive mission work to you--but see, in a secularized, post-Christian environment, but it's where we begin.

(VAMP)

Well, there's a lot more to say on this, obviously; it's why I wrote the book, and you'll just have to get it :), but let me end with a vision--it's one I built the whole structure of Everyday Revolutionary around: Daniel's witness in Babylon. Daniel was the one, I think, who best lived out Jeremiah's command to seek the prosperity of his earthly city and make it a better place to live.

Remember when we studied Daniel a couple years ago? Daniel was not shy about sharing the truth, right? I mean, Daniel was so courageous in speaking truth that he ended up in the lion's den. And yet, Daniel is so beloved by the King whose wicked decree put him there that the King stays up all night outside the lion's den weeping, hoping against hope that Daniel will make it through the night!

Personally, I don't think King Darius stood outside the lion's den all night just because he missed Daniel's prophetic rebukes; I think it was because he genuinely knew Daniel was his friend; that Daniel cared about him. Because Babylon was a better place because Daniel was in it, and the king couldn't imagine Babylon without Daniel.

My question is, "How do we become like that in our society?" So bold and courageous that we end up in the lion's den, yes; but so beloved by our community that they'd weep at the thought of our being gone. It's like we've said for 20 years, Summit: we want people here to say, "We may not believe what those crazy people over at Summit believe, but thank God they're here, because if not, we'd have to raise our taxes. Who would take care of our homeless? Who would take care of our foster kids?"

And that means taking care of the homeless, the orphan, the prisoner, the unwed mother and the high school dropout.

Which is why I want to end today directing your attention to this:

(Card)

Let me start with the back side: Each month your campus hosts something called serve Saturday - which is one way you can LIVE SENT in your community. Our next one will be happening this coming Saturday and it is a great starting point if you've never served with us before. It's how you can engage the homeless, the orphan, the prisoner, the unwed mother and the high school dropout. I want you to sign up for one of these if you've never done so before.

But I really want you to take a look at the front side. We're going to host a Live Sent Night here on October 17, and this night is nothing like we have done before at the Summit. It's going to be an interactive and eye opening look inside the foster care system. As you heard, foster care is one of the most important and neediest ways we can be involved in blessing and renewing our cities. Foster care is an intersection of several of the things we've talked about today. All you have to do is scan the QR code right on the card. You are NOT committing to anything by attending: it's just to learn more and prayerfully consider how you can support vulnerable children and families. And, btw, it may not be by becoming an actual foster family yourself--your role might be supporting and encouraging foster families. What we've learned is that while the foster family is important, there's a whole system behind that foster family that is essential, too. Maybe some of you can become part of that supporting network.

BOW HEADS

- Where is the Holy Spirit telling you to get involved? Where is he calling you?
- I invite you to come and put your 'yes' on the table. Pray.
- Maybe you have needs of your own. You're like, "Pastor J.D., I can't even begin to think about blessing others, my life is such a mess." That's ok. This is where you start. I want you to come and pray around these altars. I'm going to ask our prayer teams to stand off to the sides; if you want to pray with them, you do it; otherwise you can just kneel here at the altar.
